NOTE

This Bibliography takes note only of original copies and publications, and does not include secondary reproductions and discussions. Finds of small objects are not recorded except in very special cases.
INTRODUCTORY NOTE

The sites dealt with in the present volume are those in the Nile Valley between Asyût and the First Cataract but omitting the six large temple-groups of Abydos, Dendera, Esna, Edfu, Kôm Ombo, and Philae, which will form the sixth volume of this series. The whole of Thebes is also excluded, as the necropolis and temples have already appeared in the first two volumes. As before our method is to ascend the Nile Valley taking the sites in geographical order, following the east and west banks alternately, special sections being allotted to Abydos, El-Kâb, and Aswân.

I. The fourth volume having ended with Asyût and Deir Durunka, we now begin with the rock-tombs of Deir Rtfa just south of them, and the scanty remains from other places on the west bank of the Nile. Then follows a series of important sites on the east bank, the most noteworthy being the early cemeteries round Badari excavated by Mr. Brunton, the XIIth Dynasty rock-tombs of Qâw el-Kebir, the district of Akhmim from which come a large number of stelae now in museums, and the cemeteries of Nag' el-Deir. We return to the west bank at Sohâg for the temples and rock-tombs at Athribis excavated by Petrie, and the large necropolis in the neighbourhood of Girga, including the protodynastic royal tombs at Beit Khallâf.

II. The arrangement of Abydos presents considerable difficulties. Apart from the great temple of Sethos I, the temples of Ramesses I and II, and the Osireion, which are not included in this volume, no inscribed monuments remain on the spot, and the whole necropolis has hardly any recognizable features except the mounds marking the position of the Osiris Temple Enclosure, the great walls of the Shûnet el-Zebib, and the pyramid of Amosis in the far south. It has been found simplest to divide the site into north, central, and south sections, following roughly the arrangement of Mariette, and to take the various buildings and cemeteries in topographical order, the approximate positions being indicated on the key-plan. The outstanding monument of the north section is the great Osiris Temple occupied from the earliest times, whence a large number of stelae and blocks were brought to the Cairo Museum by Mariette; it was afterwards excavated by the Egypt Exploration Society, and detailed plans of its successive temples made by Petrie. In the present work the remains from actual parts of the temple have been arranged chronologically, followed by stelae and other finds from the temple area, and from Kôm el-Sultân, the large mound in the north-west corner of the Temple Enclosure dug by Mariette. From the Osiris Temple we pass westward to the protodynastic fortress of Shûnet el-Zebib and the ‘Middle Fort’, with the cemeteries in and round them, and the North Cemetery of Mariette. The latter contains only one definite tomb, the rest of the material being divided into stelae, statues, &c., and arranged chronologically, as the geographical details, which will be found in Mariette's Catalogue, are too vague for analysis. Later archaeologists pay more attention to individual tombs, and it has therefore been found possible to arrange these numerically under each cemetery.

The Central Section is less complicated. On the east we have the ‘petit temple de l'ouest’ found by Mariette, and some cemeteries dug by the Egypt Exploration Society along the eastern ridge. The Middle Cemetery of Mariette occupies a large area immediately south of the wâdi leading to Umm el-Qa‘ab, and from it came a great number of stelae in the Cairo Museum, again arranged chronologically, while Petrie's Cemetery G overlaps it to a certain extent, and other minor cemeteries adjoin it. At the west end lies the protodynastic royal cemetery of Umm el-Qa‘ab excavated by Amélineau and later by Petrie.

The South Section includes remains from cemeteries near the Temple of Sethos I, and the Royal Cemetery away to the south containing the cenotaph and temple of Sesostris III, with the town, pyramid, and temples of Amosis, and the shrine of Queen Tetisheri.

Monuments from Abydos of which the exact provenance is uncertain are grouped together in a miscellaneous section divided into stelae, statues, &c., under each museum. It is often difficult to ascertain whether the provenance was really known, or was merely assumed from the style or text of the object: in the latter case they are usually not included in our catalogue. As might be expected, the number of stelae from Abydos in the Cairo Museum is so enormous that a complete list would be too lengthy for the space at our disposal; we have therefore excluded those stelae published only in the Cairo Museum Catalogues, or by Mariette, of which a summary will be found in a special Appendix at the end of the book.

Lastly come the predynastic slate-palettes generally supposed to have been found at Abydos.

III. The third section covers the sites between Abydos and Thebes, first those on the west bank including Hû, the Dendera necropolis, and El-Ballâş and Naqâda, and then the east bank with El-Qaṣr wa’l-Šaiyâd, Koptos, and Madâmûd. The Temple of Madâmûd has been completely excavated by the French Oriental Institute, and all details will be found in their volumes, of which there is still one not yet published; in order to conform to our topographical arrangement, and to simplify the material for the reader, we refer first to all inscribed walls and architectural parts of the temple, the positions of which are marked on our plan, and then deal with the finds from the four main divisions of the temple, arranged chronologically in each. Among the latter will be found the important Middle Kingdom statues and portals discovered in the foundations.

IV. Between Thebes and El-Kâb the chief sites on the west bank are those of Armant with its destroyed temples now being explored by the Egypt Exploration Society, and the Bucheum lately excavated and published by Sir Robert Mond, the remains from the necropolis and temple at Gebelein chiefly dug by the Italians, and the cemeteries of Esna (the temples being reserved for the next volume). The east bank contains the temple of Montu at Tod, now being excavated by the French Oriental Institute, and a number of small sites, including the completely destroyed late temple at Contralatopolis.

V. The twin cities of Nekheb and Nekhen demand a section to themselves. Here we begin with the ancient town enclosure at El-Kâb containing remains of New Kingdom temples seen by the earlier archaeologists, and the cemeteries in and around it. Then follow two small temples outside the enclosure (one the destroyed ‘peripteral temple’ of Tuthmosis III described by Wilkinson and others), the well-known rock-tombs farther east, the Ptolemaic temple with the temples of Ramesses II and Amenophis III on the desert edge, and the Old Kingdom graffiti on various rocks. At Hierakonpolis little remains to-day, but from the Temple Enclosure we have the unique protodynastic and Old Kingdom finds now chiefly in Cairo and Oxford. The Fort, two groups of rock-tombs, and the predynastic painted tomb discovered by Green, complete this site.

VI. Our sixth section takes us from El-Kâb to Aswân, including Edfu Tell, Shaṭṭ el-Rigâl, and West Silsila on the one bank, and the shrines and quarries of East Silsila on the other. At Shaṭṭ el-Rigâl the rock-texts are arranged numerically following Petrie, as being most convenient for reference, while at West Silsila we have followed a strictly geographical method, taking first the rock-speos of Haremḥab, and then the various shrines and graffiti along the river to the three royal shrines at the south end.

VII. Aswân falls into three natural divisions: first the town on the east bank, with its rock-texts, late temples, and quarries to the south, then the island of Elephantine, and finally the rock-tombs on the west bank. Of the buildings at Elephantine there is little left except the blocks built into the quay and the granite pylon of Alexander belonging to the Temple of Khnum, the two small XVIIIth Dynasty temples having been destroyed in 1822. It may be assumed, however, that most of the monuments here grouped together under Miscellaneous came originally from the temples on this island.
VIII. The final section deals with the district between Aswán and Philae, and consists chiefly of the numerous rock-stelae and graffiti along the ancient road and by the east bank of the Nile, and other groups of similar texts on the islands of Siheil, Konosso, Biga, and El-Heisa. For these the geographical arrangement of de Morgan has been followed as far as possible, supplemented by information gleaned from Petrie, A Season in Egypt, except that our order is as usual from north to south. As the graffiti have been numbered independently by Petrie and Mariette, we have given equations of their numbers with those of de Morgan. On the island of Biga there is also the temple which faced Philae and was intimately connected with it, and on El-Heisa some remains from the tombs of the priests.

At the end of the book will be found three maps showing the positions of sites mentioned, the Appendix of Abydos stelae in the Cairo Museum already referred to, and indexes of royal and private names, divinities, and geographical sites.

In the present volume we are chiefly concerned with sites from which most of the inscribed monuments have been removed to museums. At Armant, however, the Egypt Exploration Society is exploring the remains of the temple-site, and at Tod the French Oriental Institute is excavating the Temple of Monthu. With regard to objects removed from the spot, every endeavour has been made to find out the present position of each, and where possible to give the Museum number. For this purpose the Egypt Exploration Society and the British School of Archaeology kindly allowed me to consult their distribution-lists, and thus we have been able to track down a great number of stelae and blocks from Abydos and Dendera, some of which had found their way to museums as far off as Japan and Australia. I am particularly grateful to the museums concerned for their interest and co-operation.

Strictly speaking we ought to exclude from this Bibliography all references to small objects, but in the case of the protodynastic remains from Umm el-Qa'âb, Naqâda, and Hierakonpolis, we have allowed ourselves a certain latitude, as the main records of this period often consist of plaques and sherds. Again only original copies of reliefs and texts are included, secondary copies, translations, and discussions being outside the scope of the present work, while objects of which the provenance is doubtful, or only assumed from the inscriptions, are generally omitted. For the detailed cataloguing of scenes in tombs and temples, the same method has been followed as in previous volumes, the registers being counted from the top.

The transliteration of proper names presents endless difficulties, and it is almost impossible to be entirely consistent. Our usual method has been to give a literal rendering for Old and Middle Kingdom names, to retain the older literal forms in the New Kingdom although various sounds had by then dropped out or changed, but for all the later periods to use 'Copticized' forms. Where names are differently transliterated by various authorities, or a man is known by several names, we have given a cross-reference to our spelling of the principal name. The personal titles are not intended to be complete, as only the chief ones, or those which were most intelligible or interesting, have been selected, in order to distinguish individuals.

In the present volume I am specially indebted to Professor Gunn for help in the revision of Egyptian names in the proofs, to Mr. Brunton, Professor Steindorff, Herr Steckeweh, and Mr. Myers for details or plans of their excavations, to Dr. Schott who kindly paid a special visit to Gebel Silsila on our behalf, and to the Service des Antiquités for facilitating my own researches when verifying the material in Egypt. I also wish to thank the staffs of the numerous museums which have placed their records at our disposal, especially Cairo Museum and the Louvre to whom I have applied so often for detailed information.

Since the publication of our last volume we have suffered a grievous loss in the death of Professor Griffith. It was on his initiative (in connexion at first with Professor Erman and the Berlin Dictionary) that this Bibliography was begun some forty years ago, when he made himself financially responsible for it, and placed it under his personal supervision. Fortunately the work had reached an advanced stage at the time of his death, and there will be no difficulty in completing the original scheme of seven volumes with indexes, funds for the purpose having been provided by his generosity, and the Clarendon Press kindly continuing its contribution towards the expenses of production. During the first twenty-five years Miss Porter went through all the publications collecting references, since when the verification in Egypt, inclusion of recent material, and final arrangement of the manuscript has been taken over by me, the whole of the bibliographical work being still done in Professor Griffith’s library. Owing to advancing years Miss Porter has now ceased to take an active part in the work, but I have been fortunate in securing the help of two assistants, Mrs. C. F. Burney and Mrs. R. F. Symonds, in the arduous task of bringing the material up to date and preparing it for the Press.

The authors will be grateful if those who make use of this Bibliography will send a note of any omission or error to me, c/o Mrs. F. Ll. Griffith, Sandridge, Boar’s Hill, Oxford.

In this document, the text is fragmented and contains references to various authors and sources, discussing topics related to Ancient Egyptian history and art. The text references works by De Morgan, Mariette, Morgan, Palanque, and others. It mentions specific texts, such as those found in "La Bible de l'Egypte Ancienne," "Les Premières Médicis," and "Les Mémoires de la Société des Antiquaires de France." The text also includes references to specific art objects, such as "Famine stela," "Viceroy of Kush," and "Two men before goddess." It discusses the presence of divinities and particular periods of Ramesses VI and Sethos I. The text is rich in detail, mentioning specific names and events, indicating a deep study of ancient Egyptian artifacts and their contexts. The text is scholarly in nature, likely intended for readers with a background in Egyptology or related fields.
